ANCESTORS OF CHIEF JUSTICE OLIVER ELLSWORTH⁴

E L L S W O R T H

1. Josias Ellsworth¹ (Sgt.) was probably born 1629 at Cambridgeshire, England, came to America in 1645 and settled in Windsor, Connecticut, in 1646. On November 16, 1654, he married Elizabeth Holcomb (see page 4) and in 1665 bought the property in Windsor, now known as The Ellsworth Homestead. (This property, called "Elmwood" by members of the immediate family, was deeded to the Connecticut Daughters of the American Revolution on October 8, 1903 by the one hundred and sixteen heirs of Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth. The last Ellsworth descendants residing there had passed away and there was not one of the many heirs who desired to make their home at Windsor. Its preservation materially and historically was assured by this gift. The Ellsworth Homestead had descended in the family since 1665, and not an inch of land had been deeded or conveyed to anyone.) He died August 20, 1689. She was born in 1634 and died September 18, 1712. They had nine children, their sixth child:

2. Jonathan Ellsworth² (Captain) was born at Windsor, Connecticut, June 28, 1669. He kept a tavern and a small store of West India goods, rum, etc., and was engaged in many business ventures; a man of sterling good sense and of such wit and humor that he bore the name of "Hector Ellsworth". In person, he was tall and strong. He was Connecticut Lieutenant and Captain in Queen Anne's War and Indian Wars, 1702-24. His death on September 13, 1749 was caused by being thrown from his horse. He married October 26, 1693 Sarah Grant (see page 2) who was born September 19, 1673 and died November 9, 1755. They had ten children; their seventh child:

3. David Ellsworth³ (Captain) was born August 3, 1709 at Windsor, Connecticut, died March 5, 1782; was a captain, serving in the "Old French War". He commanded a company of men from Windsor in 1745 at the Siege of Louisburg. On July 8, 1740, he married Jemima Leavitt (see page 2) of Suffield, "a lady of excellent mind, good character, and pious principles". She was born November 10, 1720 and died February 1, 1790. They had four children, their second:

4. Oliver Ellsworth⁴ (Chief Justice) was born at Windsor, Connecticut, April 29, 1745 and died November 26, 1807; married December 10, 1772 Abigail Wolcott who was born February 8, 1755, and died August 4, 1818. They had nine children. (For ancestors of Abigail Wolcott, see pages 5-8)

ANCESTORS OF ABIGAIL WOLCOTT, HIS WIFE

W O L C O T T

1. Henry Wolcott, baptized at Lydeard, Somerset, England, December 6, 1578; came in the "Mary & John" to Dorchester, Massachusetts, in 1630; brought with him a commission from the crown as justice; freeman 1634; a founder of Dorchester and of Windsor, Connecticut, 1635; constable 1636; deputy General Court 1639; governor's assistant 1643-55, died May 30, 1655 at Windsor, Connecticut; married in England January 19, 1606 Elizabeth Saunders, born 1582, and died July 7, 1655; daughter of Thomas Saunders. They had seven children, their fifth child:

2. Simon Wolcott, born September 11, 1624/25 in England; was five when his father emigrated to America. He remained in England with his two sisters until the family had effected a settlement in this country; coming within ten years after. He was admitted a freeman of Windsor in 1654 and in 1680 removed to East Windsor; was Captain, Simsbury Trainband 1673. During King Phillip's War he and other settlers were driven from their homes. It is said that he buried a brass kettle containing the family silver, sinking it in the mud of the swamp and that it was never recovered. He married first on March 19, 1657 Joanna Cook, daughter of Aaron Cook. She was born August 5, 1638 and died April 27, 1657. He married second on October 17, 1661 Martha Pitkin, born in England about 1639 and died at Windsor, Connecticut, October 13, 1719. According to family traditions, she came to Hartford, Connecticut, to visit her brother, William Pitkin, and to persuade him to return to England. Her personal charms and superior education made a sensation in the little colony of Connecticut; a mild conspiracy to keep her was entered into and Simon Wolcott (above) was selected as the best fitted to wed her. Her husband died September 11, 1687 leaving her with six children and an estate encumbered with debt. She married second Daniel Clark (1623-1710) who came from England in 1639 and settled in Windsor. They had nine children; their seventh child:

3. William Wolcott born November 6, 1676, died January 27, 1749; married November 5, 1706 Abiah Hawley of Windsor. She died June 16, 1716.

4. William Wolcott, born July 21, 1711, died May 22, 1799, married first on February 26, 1746 Abigail Abbott (page 6) born November 25, 1718 and died October 12, 1763. He married second Naomi (widow of his first cousin, Captain Gideon Wolcott) daughter of Deacon Joseph and Hannah (Marsh) Olmsted, who was born March 1, 1721 and died November 7, 1775. He was graduated from Yale 1734; was Justice of the Peace; for many years Representative of General Assembly, 1778; was active and patriotic during the Revolution period; Chairman of the Town Committee of Correspondence of the County Committee of Observation. They had seven children, their fifth child:

5. Abigail Wolcott born February 8, 1755; died August 4, 1818, married December 10, 1772 Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ (page 1). A story is told that when Ellsworth made his first visit to the Wolcott house, he called for an elder sister, but that the black eyes of Abigail who sat demurely in the chimney corner made him change his mind and the next time he went there he called for her.

Oliver Ellsworth (April 29, 1745 - November 26, 1807) statesman, chief justice, the second son of Captain David and Jenima (Leavitt) Ellsworth, was born in Windsor, Connecticut, to which town his great-grandfather, Josias Ellsworth, had come from Yorkshire, England, about the middle of the 17th Century. Of his childhood practically nothing of certainty is known. His father, who had set his heart upon Oliver's becoming a minister, gave him the best that the time had to offer in the way of an education. Prepared for college by the Rev. Joseph Bellamy of Bethlehem, he entered Yale in 1762, only to leave that institution for Princeton at the end of his sophomore year. Tradition has perpetuated many stories to account for his leaving Yale, some of which would indicate that his departure was not altogether voluntary; the one sure bit of information concerning it is found in President Clap's journal (July 27, 1764) "Oliver Ellsworth and Waightsill Avery, at the desire of their respective parents, were dismissed from being members of this college". Whatever the cause of the episode, it apparently produced no permanent ill-feeling, all of Ellsworth's sons who grew up were graduated from Yale, he himself was afterwards a fellow of the corporation, and in 1790 the college conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. -- as did Princeton and Dartmouth in 1797. After two years at Princeton, Oliver, now a B.A. returned home and took up the study of theology with the Rev. John Smalley of New Britain. This study did not long continue, however, for within a year he turned to law. For the next four years he studied that subject, doing some teaching in the interval, and being admitted to the bar in 1771. The following year he married Abigail Wolcott of East Windsor.

Legal business came to him so slowly at first that he found it necessary to support himself by farming and even wood-chopping, financial aid from his father apparently having ceased when he definitely gave up fitting himself for the ministry. Too poor to keep a horse, on days when the court was sitting he was forced to walk from his farm to Hartford and back, a round trip of twenty miles. During the first three years of his practise the returns from his profession, by his own admission, amounted to only three pounds Connecticut currency per annum. In 1775, after having already represented Windsor in the General Assembly, he removed to Hartford. From this time, his rise at the bar was exceptionally rapid. Noah Webster, who in 1779 came to Ellsworth's office to study law, said that he then had usually from 1000 to 1500 cases on his list, and that there was hardly a case tried in which Ellsworth did not represent one side or the other. This large practise, coupled with the general success of his advocacy, brought him recognition as one of the leaders of the Connecticut bar, and enabled him to lay the foundation of what, by shrewd and careful management, became a large fortune.

His position made it inevitable that he should be connected with the courts of his state in ways other than merely as a lawyer. He was appointed state's attorney for Hartford County in 1777, and three years later became a member of the Governor's Council. In 1784 this Council was constituted a supreme court of errors of which Ellsworth, by virtue of his office, became one of the judges. Shortly thereafter he was made a judge of the superior court, in which position he continued to serve for the next four years, his resignation from the Council and the office of state's attorney taking place in 1785. It is indicative of his high regard in which he continued to hold the judicial offices of his native state, that after his return from France, he should have been willing again to accept a place on the Governor's Council, and that the last year of his life, after having already been chief justice of the United States, he should have consented to act as the first chief justice of the new state supreme court of appeals -- a consent which ill health forced him to withdraw before he had ever actually entered upon the duties of the office.

Ellsworth was connected with the revolutionary activities of his state almost from the beginning. Shortly after the outbreak of open hostility in Massachusetts, Connecticut had instituted her Committee of the Pay Table, a commission of five to supervise the expenditures rendered necessary by the state's war measures. Ellsworth was one of the five. Early in 1776, he was sent to General Washington at Cambridge to seek repayment of the money Connecticut had advanced to her men in the Continental Army; later in the same year, he was intrusted with a similar mission to General Schuyler in an attempt to recover other moneys which the state had paid to troops employed in Canada. In 1779 he was chosen a member of the important Council of Safety which, with the governor, was in practical control of all military measures. As early as 1777 the General Assembly had appointed him one of the delegates to represent the state in the Continental Congress; chosen annually he continued to serve in that capacity for six years, declining a further appointment in 1783.

Long before he had even started for Philadelphia, Congress had made him one of a committee of five to investigate the failure of the Rhode Island expedition. The day after he took his seat in Congress (October 8, 1778) he was named a member of the committee on marine affairs. Hardly more than two weeks later he was appointed to the committee on appeals, which listened to appeals brought from the admiralty courts of the various states, and which "was always composed of the ablest lawyers in the House". Ellsworth became a member of the committee just in time to sit upon the hearing of the appeal in the noted case of Gideon Olmstead and the British sloop "Active". Details of his activities in the Congress are obscure. In a general way, we know that he was a hard worker, able and conscientious, and that he continued to serve on one committee or another as long as his term lasted. Thus in 1780 he was on the committee appointed to consider the best method of carrying out Washington's plan of supplying the army by requisitions of specific articles laid on the different states. With Hamilton and Madison for colleagues he served on two committees, one of which was concerned with the matter of neutrality agreements and the other of which was so broad in its scope that its work practically amounted to a consideration of a permanent system of administration. Towards the end of his last term when the unpaid and mutinous soldiers surrounded the building in which the Congress was sitting, he served with Hamilton and Peters on the committee sent by that body to urge upon the executive council of Pennsylvania to call out their state militia.

When Connecticut finally decided to send delegates to the Constitutional Convention, Ellsworth, Roger Sherman and William S. Johnson were selected to represent the state. The part played by this delegation as a whole in the business of the Convention, especially in the matter of the so-called "Connecticut compromise", is clear enough; the exact influence and importance of the individual members is not so clear. By one writer or another, each of the three delegates has been given the credit for having brought about the compromise. Ellsworth's motion that "the rule of suffrage in the second branch be the same with that established by the articles of confederation" undoubtedly started the discussion that preceded the compromise and during the debate he seems to have borne the brunt of the attacks of the large-state men; but the accuracy of the statement that "to the resolute efforts and persevering energy of Oliver Ellsworth more than to any other man in the convention is the country indebted for the final compromise of the constitution which gave to each state an equality of representation in the Senate" may well be questioned. Though it is extremely difficult to gauge the influence of Ellsworth or of any other one man in the convention, he unquestionably took an active part. His amendment to substitute the words "United States" for the word "National" in a resolution then under consideration seems to have fixed the title which was thereafter used in the convention to designate the government. He objected to the payment of representatives out of the Federal treasury and proposed payment by the states. He favored the three-fifths ratio in counting slaves as a basis of both taxation and representation; strangely enough, also he stood out against the abolition of the foreign slave-trade. He was one of the committee of five of which Rutledge was the chairman, which prepared for the convention the first official draft of the constitution. His work for the new constitution did not end at Philadelphia. In the convention which met at Hartford in January 1788 to consider its acceptance or rejection by Connecticut, he spared no effort in explaining it and urging its adoption. His "Letters of the Landholder" printed in the "Connecticut Courant" and the "American Mercury" (November 1787 - March 1788) and widely circulated were written with the same object of ratification in view.

Chosen by Connecticut as one of its first two senators under the Constitution, he represented his state in the United States Senate for a period of seven years, resigning from that body in the spring of 1796 after he had been appointed chief justice. It was in the Senate that the capabilities of Ellsworth appeared to their best advantage. For the work of organizing and of practical details made necessary by the newness of the government, he seems to have been peculiarly fitted. There can be no question as to the predominant position he enjoyed in the senate. Meager as the details are, they are sufficient to show him as an outstanding figure. A hundred years after, the memory of his prestige was still alive in Senate tradition -- "If we may trust the traditions that have come down from the time of administrators of Washington and Adams, when the Senate sat with closed doors, none of them (Webster, Clay, Calhoun) ever acquired the authority wielded by the profound sagacity of Ellsworth".

Among other things he reported the first set for Senate rules, and considered a plan for printing the journals; he reported back from conference the first twelve amendments to the Constitution which Congress submitted to the states; he framed the measure which admitted North Carolina, and devised the non-intercourse act that forced Rhode Island into the Union; he reported a bill for the development of the territory of the United States south of Ohio; he drew up the first bill regulating the consular service; he was on the committees to which were referred Hamilton's plans for funding the national debt and for the encouraging of a bank of the United States, both of which he vigorously seconded. Undoubtedly his most important single piece of work was done in connection with his chairmanship of the committee appointed to bring in a bill organizing the federal judiciary. "That the Judiciary Bill which came from his committee was to a large extent drafted by Ellsworth is now well established". Sections 10 to 23 of the original draft bill are in his hand writing; Maclay of Pennsylvania, himself one of the committee, records that "this vile bill is a child of his, and he defends it with the care of a parent". All in all, his work in the Senate made him as John Adams later said, "the firmest pillar of his (Washington's) whole administration".

Ellsworth was commissioned chief justice of the United States (March 4, 1796) after the senate had refused to confirm the previous appointment of Rutledge; and after Cushing had declined the honor. For about three years and a half he was actively engaged in the duties of his office, which at that time included the arduous task of writing the federal circuits. His short term of office, coupled with the fact that he was immediately followed by the great Marshall, has been advanced by some of his biographers as the reason for his failure to take a higher rank among the chief justices. The real reason would seem to lie elsewhere. Our available sources of information unite in presenting him as a great lawyer; but neither his reported opinions nor the weight of other evidences justify us in calling him a great judge. His decisions, neither many nor long as they have come down to us, are marked by strong common sense, but hardly by great legal learning. He himself seems to have been conscious of his lack of this latter quality, as also of the inadequacy of his previous training and preparation for his new position and "he accordingly took a severe course of study and reading". He was primarily the advocate rather than the jurist, a champion of the cause he happened to be supporting. This characteristic which undoubtedly contributed much to his success at the bar and which showed to very great advantage in his work in the Congress, in the convention, and in the Senate, could hardly be brought to bear in purely judicial business.

The last notable service that Ellsworth performed was as commissioner to France in 1799-1800. The mission began inauspiciously and resulted in no more than partial success. There was decided opposition to it at home because of the harsh treatment which France had recently accorded Pinckney and his associates. Ellsworth, even if he did not share in popular resentment, at least manifested no enthusiasm towards President Adam's new attempt to come to an understanding with France. Reluctantly and merely "from the necessity of preventing greater evil" he accepted his commission (February 1799), yet he dreaded the mission and did what he could to postpone it. Consequently it was not until November 3rd that he and his colleague, William R. Davie, left Newport on the frigate UNITED STATES to join William Vans Murray in France. After a boisterous passage of more than three weeks they put into Lisbon, rested there for a fortnight and then again set sail only to be driven off their course by storms and obliged to land near Corunna in Spain. Thence they proceeded overland to Paris which they did not reach until March 2, 1800. The hardships suffered by Ellsworth during these four months permanently affected his health. It was thought by some of his friends in America that his mind also had been impaired by his physical breakdown and that this was the reason why no better terms were secured in the French convention. After protracted negotiations with Napoleon, which lasted until October, the American ministers were obliged to accept an agreement which conformed to neither their earlier hopes nor their instructions. Ellsworth himself was far from satisfied with it though he regarded it as sufficient in that it kept the United States out of a not improbable war with France. When Davie and Oliver Ellsworth, Jr., who had been his father's secretary at Paris, and who now bore the latter's resignation of his office of chief justice, left England for America toward the end of October, Ellsworth himself was unable to accompany him. Through the winter he remained in England, traveling by easy stages from place to place and making an ineffectual effort to regain his health. He left England in March, landed in Boston, where he rested for a few days, and then proceeded to his home in Windsor and, as far as national affairs were concerned, into retirement.

Timothy Dwight described Ellsworth as "tall, dignified and commanding". "He was particular as to his personal appearance and never hurried in his toilet". By the judgment of his fellows he was a good, and at times a brilliant, conversationalist; yet unlike almost all of his contemporaries in similar stations, he was not given to voluminous correspondence. He had an incessant habit of talking to himself even in the presence of others. His one vice was the taking of snuff, a practise to which he was greatly addicted. It is related by his daughter that "when he was more than ordinarily engaged in thinking, or in writing, he would take out his box at frequent intervals and go through the form of taking a pinch, and would then drop most of the snuff in little piles on the carpet near him. His family sometimes judged the intensity and depth of his meditations by the number of these piles of snuff around his chair." Naturally moderate and conservative, he nevertheless at times manifested tenacity of purpose that bordered on obstinacy. Aaron Burr said of him, "If Ellsworth had happened to spell the name of the Deity with two d's, it would have taken the Senate three weeks to expunge the superfluous letter". Deeply religious he was throughout his life not only active in the work of his own (Congregational) church, but also kept up a lively interest in religious and theological questions, to the study of which he turned more and more after his retirement. He had always been free from the bigotry of Puritan New England; his sufferings and illness did not make him an ascetic. In his very last years, after he had "begun to die" as he wrote of his friends, agriculture as well as theology occupied his mind and he published regularly in the "Connecticut Courant" the "Farmer's Repository" a very practical column on agricultural topics. He was a politician as well as a statesman, and at times was not averse to using the methods of politics to accomplish his purposes. It is on this basis that his seeming connection with an alleged plot to break up the Union can be explained. Family 9 - Martin Ellsworth Hall⁷, Commander, United States Navy (son of Abigail Wolcott Ellsworth Hall⁶, Martin Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 6, page 17) was born September 19, 1847 at Washington, D.C., and died February 21, 1904 at the Naval Hospital, Norfolk, Virginia. On September 19, 1865 he was appointed Midshipman from Fifth District Iowa by Hon. John A. Kassan. He graduated from the Naval Academy June 4, 1869, was commissioned ensign from July 12, 1870; master from December 12, 1873; lieutenant from November 1, 1879; lieutenant commander from December 25, 1893; placed on retired list from June 30, 1900 with the rank of commander; during which time he served as engineer officer on numerous ships. In response to an appeal for the invention of torpedoes of American manufacture, he designed a torpedo and was assigned to the Newport, R.I. torpedo station to develop it. On October 2, 1878 he married Mary Cushing of Lowell, Massachusetts, born January 1, 1855 and died October 8, 1928, the daughter of Oliver Edwards Cushing (a civil engineer, for many years agent for the Lowell Gas Light Co.) and Mary Edson of Bridgewater, Massachusetts. Her father's engineering training stood her in good stead, for while Commander Hall was at sea during the development of the torpedo, she went to the Westinghouse shop at Pittsburgh to explain some drawings of the torpedo engine. The Chief Engineer would not listen to a woman. She then went to Mr. Westinghouse's office, told him why she had come so far and the cold reception his chief engineer had given her. He asked to see the drawings, which she explained to him. He was much impressed, and summoned the engineer, saying "I am sure Mrs. Hall can clear up your questions in regard to the engine".

1. Margaret Woodburn Hall⁸ was born December 22, 1879; married Faxton Eugene Gardner at Lowell, Massachusetts, on July 23, 1927. She died January 16, 1932.
2. Annie Louise Hall⁸ was born January 15, 1881; attended public schools here and there till she entered Vassar in 1899, graduating with the class of 1903. She taught for five years in private schools in Philadelphia, Cleveland and Buffalo, then did settlement work for one year in the Bohemian district in New York City. For the next five years, she worked as an organizer and lecturer for woman suffrage in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and New York states. In the latter her work was chiefly in Rochester, the home of Susan B. Anthony. With the victory of the Empire state assured in 1917, it was inevitable that the rest of the nation should soon fall into line. So she then turned to business, helping women to secure their financial future through life insurance and annuity investments with the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company of Springfield, Massachusetts. She retired from this work after fifteen years, sold the family homestead in Lowell, Massachusetts, and migrated to England with her friend, Ethel Bret Harte. After a year they returned to the United States, motored across the continent and built themselves a little home in Ojai where they have lived the past six years. (She writes: "But the New England blood of our forebears is luring us to the colder, more invigorating climate of New England and so our little home here is for sale at a real bargain. Or failing sale in the near future, we should be glad to exchange it for a year for a small, comfortable house in a Connecticut or Vermont Village, or on the near outskirts of same. Correspondence is invited with any of the relatives who may be interested.") Address: Box 51, R.F.D. #1, Ojai, Ventura County, California.

4. Oliver Cushing Hall⁸ born May 29, 1891 in Newport, R.I. Graduated, Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1914, in electrical engineering. In the summer of 1915, he campaigned with his sister, Annie Louise, in the State of Pennsylvania, for the state amendment for Woman Suffrage. On this campaign he drove a truck on which was mounted a full sized bronze replica of the Liberty Bell. He met Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, and other suffrage notables. The next year he commenced work with the A.T. & T. Co. in the Long Distance Lines Department, and for the last ten years has been with the Bell Telephone Laboratories, in New York City, working on the development of Toll circuits and dial telephone systems. On January 2, 1930, he married May Frances Gardner, who was born August 10, 1908 in New York City, the daughter of Faxon Eugene ^{Gardner} (who married Margaret Woodburn Hall, preceding page) and Gabrielle Debains (both Doctors of Medicine, receiving their degrees from the University of Paris Medical College.) Family 10 - Martha Barker Hall⁷ (daughter of Abigail Wolcott Ellsworth Hall⁶, Martin Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 6, page 17) (name changed to Martha Wolcott Hall, after Elizabeth Wolcott, sister of Martin Ellsworth's wife, and wife of Hon. Erastus Ellsworth). She was born December 2, 1855 in Washington, D. C., and died September 3, 1903; married in Springfield, Massachusetts on May 23, 1883 James Ripley Wellman Hitchcock, art-critic, journalist, author. He was born July 3, 1857 at Fitchburg, Massachusetts, and died in New York City May 4, 1918, the son of Dr. Alfred Hitchcock and Aurilla Phebe (Wellman) Hitchcock. He graduated (A.B.) from Harvard in 1877, and spent another year there in the study of art and philosophy. He next went to New York for a year's work in medicine and surgery, thinking to give his father's profession a trial. His taste did not run in that direction, however, and he began writing volunteer articles for newspapers and magazines, achieving such success that in 1882 he joined the staff of the New York Tribune as art critic. He filled this place with distinction for eight years, during which time he also made extended tours through the Northwest and in New Mexico, Arizona, California, and Mexico as staff correspondent of the Tribune. His letters were signed J.R.W.H., and were very nearly the last of his writings to bear his full name. Finding it too cumbersome, he dropped part of it and was known thereafter only as Ripley Hitchcock. During this middle period of his life he lived for a number of years at Nutley, New Jersey, and was conspicuous among those who made that place a noteworthy center of literature and art. He was a man of compelling charm, both in his personal manner and in his writings and had always a circle of friends and co-workers about him. At one time he organized a historical pageant at Nutley -- one of the first affairs of the kind in the United States -- which comprised among other things jousting with lance by knights in armor.

In 1890 he left the Tribune to become literary adviser for the publishing house of D. Appleton & Co., and there served for twelve years, during which time he was instrumental in introducing the writings of Rudyard Kipling to the American public. In 1906 he became literary adviser and director for Harper & Bros., then undergoing re-organization and had much to do with restoring that company to its former high degree of prosperity. He held this place until his death. Meantime he did much lecturing on literary and artistic subjects, took a large part in various reform movements in New York City and wrote and edited many books.

His works on art include "Etching in America (1886); Notable Etchings by American Artists (1886); Madonnas Old Masters (1888); Some American Painters in Water Colors (1890). In entirely different vein, he wrote Thomas DeQuincey, a Study (1899); also published as the introduction to an edition of Confessions of an English Opium Eater; The Louisiana Purchase and the Exploration, Early History and Building of the West (1903); and the Lewis and Clark Expedition (1905), the last two coinciding somewhat with the great expositions held in celebration of the anniversaries of those events. He edited and wrote descriptive matter for several volumes of art reproductions, the most noteworthy being the Art of the World, Illustrated in the Paintings, Statuary and Architecture of the World's Columbian Exposition (1894).

In the course of his editorial career, he prepared for the press The Life of an Artist (1890) by Jules Breton; the Last Words of Thomas Carlyle (1892); the Story of the West, series (1895-1902) comprising The Story of the Indian, The Story of the Mine, The Story of the Cowboy, The Story of the Railroad, The Story of the Soldier, and The Story of the Trapper, each with an introduction by the editor; Recollections, Personal and Literary (1903) by Richard Henry Stoddard; The Trail-Makers; a Literary of History and Exploration (1904-05); Decisive Battles of America (1909) by Albert Bushnell Hart, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, and others; and the monumental Documentary Edition (1918) of Woodrow Wilson's History of the American People. (Source: Vol. IX, "Dictionary of American Biography" pages 76-77)

He married second on January 7, 1914 Helen Sanborn Sargent of New York, educator, art worker, born Elizabeth, New Jersey, on April 28, 1870, daughter of Charles Chapin and Mary Elizabeth (Prescott) Sargent. She was graduated from Miss Annie Brown's School, 1889; studied Art Students' League and in studios of noted painters; Founder, 1898, Art Workers' Club for Women (for artist models) President 11 years; founder 1914, Art Alliance of America; member National Institute of Social Sciences (v.p.); founder 1917; and chairman Art War Relief for relief of war sufferers; assisted in organizing war service class to teach art crafts to reconstruction aids in the military hospitals for disabled soldiers and sailors; vice chairman American Jugo Slavish relief; vice chairman advisory committee on memorial buildings of War Camp Community Service, vice president Woman's Roosevelt Memorial Assn., a founder and 7 years president of Art Centre, Inc., and for years honorary president; member, board National Alliance of Art and Industry. Worked many years for the revival of the ministry of healing in the churches. Member, Women's Participation Committee; member, Hostess Committee; Chairman, Women's Committee of Temple of Religions; Member, League of Nations Committee, World Fair 1939, Mayor La Guardia's Art Committee, Board of the Municipal Art Society, Colonial Dames of State of New York, Daughters of Cincinnati; vice-president, Association Berry Pilgrims of Berry Schools, Rome, Ga. Clubs: Cosmopolitan. Home: 29 E. 73rd Street, New York City. (Source: Who's Who in America 1940-41, page 1265).

He was awarded a Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary heroism in action near Fismes, France, August 11, 1918. "Under the protection of three pursuit planes, each carrying a pilot and an observer, Lts. Bernheimer and Jordan, in charge of a photo plane, carried out successfully a hazardous photographic mission over the enemy's line to the River Aisne. The four American ships were attacked by twelve enemy battle plans, Lt. Bernheimer by coolly and skilfully maneuvering his ship and Lt. Jordan by accurate operation of his machine gun, in spite of wounds in the shoulder and leg, aided materially in the victory which came to the American ships, and returned safely with thirty-six valuable photographs. The pursuit plane operated by Lts. Hitchcock and Burns was disabled while these two officers were fighting effectively. Lt. Burns was mortally wounded and his body jammed the controls. After a headlong fall of 2500 meters, Lt. Hitchcock succeeded in regaining control of his plane and piloted it back to the airdrome" He was also cited in General Orders No. 25, Headquarters 3d Army Corps, September 16, 1918, for gallantry in action, and awarded a French Croix de Guerre with two palms. Under the provisions of the Act of Congress approved March 3, 1925, he was posthumously commissioned a first lieutenant, Air Service, Aeronautics, by the President, to rank as such from June 17, 1918. Family 19 - Sophia Ellen Ellsworth⁶ (called "Ellen" since childhood) (daughter of Martin Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴, see Family 2, page 14) was born September 4, 1824 and died January 29, 1897, age 72 years; married first on May 14, 1845 George W. Strong^{Washington} of Rutland, Vermont. He was born in Rutland on February 14, 1818, the son of Hon. Moses and Lucy Maria (Smith) Strong. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1837; soon afterwards he entered the office of Phineas Smith and Edgar L. Ormsbee in the study of law, and was admitted to the Rutland County Bar in April 1845. He opened an office, but did not enter into active practice of his profession. As he had inherited the energy, public spirit and sterling business qualities of his father, his tastes led him into business life, which was in a measure forced upon him by his having charge of much of the large landed estate of his father. He early identified himself in pushing forward the project of building the Rutland & Burlington Railroad, and devoted much of his time to procuring subscriptions and awakening public thought and interest in the road; he engaged in its construction until it was opened in 1849 and was for some time a director of the corporation. He next turned his attention to the feasibility of the construction of the Rutland & Washington Railroad, a line connecting Rutland and Troy. He engaged in its construction and after its opening became a director and for two years President of the corporation. He then took active part in building the Cleveland & Pittsburg Railroad, of which he was afterward President for a time. In 1850 he contracted for the relaying of a road from Corning, Pennsylvania. Among his later enterprises and contracts was the building of a bridge across the Wisconsin River at Kilborn City. He was not unkindful of promoting the prosperity and up-building of the town of his residence and to him is Rutland indebted largely for its growth. He laid out and gave the names to Madison Ave., Pleasant, Prospect and Hopkins Streets and Strong's Avenue -- gave the lands for those streets to the town -- all of them being a part of the old homestead and running through lands owned by him. In politics he was an uncompromising Whig, and was presidential elector in 1856. He never sought or held public office. He was always an attendant of the Protestant Episcopal Church and at the time of his death, October 28, 1858, was a communicant of Trinity Church. (Source: "Rutland County", page 912)

She married second on August 28, 1878 Judge John Prout of Rutland, Vermont, who was born in Salisbury on November 21, 1815. His training was of the old-fashioned kind and his education was in the common schools and academy. He followed the trade of a printer several years and then studied law in the office of E. N. Briggs and was admitted to the bar in Addison Co. in 1837 and began practise with Mr. Briggs. He represented Salisbury in 1847, 1848 and 1851 and was state's attorney of Addison Co. from 1848 to 1851. In 1854 he moved to Rutland and there pursued his profession most successfully till he retired in 1886. He had at various times as partners, Caleb B. Harrington, Charles Linsley, W. C. Dunton, N. P. Simons and Col. Aldace F. Walker. He represented Rutland in 1865 and 1866 and was a senator for Rutland Co. in 1867. In 1867 he was elected a judge of the Supreme Court and served two years. The work was not as congenial to him as that of his profession and he declined further service. He died in Rutland, August 28, 1890. Family 21 - Rev. George Ingersoll Wood⁶ (son of Frances Ellsworth Wood⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴, see Family 20, above) was born May 20, 1814, died January 9, 1899 at Washington, D. C.; married April 28, 1840 in New Haven, Susan Townsend Merwin, second daughter of Rev. Samuel Merwin (pastor of the North Church on the Green at New Haven) and Clarina B. Taylor. She was born November 17, 1812, and died September 6, 1898. He graduated from Yale in 1833, read law, but never practiced; graduated Union Theological Seminary, New York City, 1838; ordained pastor 1839, 2nd Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C.; pastor, Congregational Church, West Hartford, North Branford and Guilford, Connecticut, St. Cloud, Minn., and Ellington, Connecticut, where he resided after 1869. They had four children:

1. Emily Merwin Wood⁷ born in Washington, D.C., February 11, 1841, see Family 22, below.
2. Oliver Ellsworth Wood⁷ born in West Hartford, Connecticut, June 6, 1844, see Family 23, page 31.
3. George Ingersoll Wood⁷ born in North Branford, Connecticut, February 12, 1850 and died April 15, 1877, age 27.
4. Joseph Wolcott Wood⁷ born in Ellington, Connecticut, October 12, 1851, and died May 3, 1877 at sea, age 25.

Family 22 - Emily Merwin Wood⁷ (daughter of Rev. George Ingersoll Wood⁶, Frances Ellsworth Wood⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 21, above) was born at Washington, D. C., February 11, 1841, and died May 18, 1916. She was a member of Daughters of the American Revolution #946, and married July 25, 1878 W. Irving Vinal, son of Dr. Levi Grear and Mary Ann (Page) Vinal. He was born at Dixmont, Maine, May 3, 1845; an officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey from 1866 until his death, April 5, 1914. They went to Washington, D.C. in September 1891.

1. a daughter, who died at birth.
2. George Wood Merwin Vinal⁸, physicist, born December 17, 1882 in Ellington, Connecticut, graduated (A.B.) from Wesleyan University of Middletown, Connecticut in 1906; A.M. in 1909; honorary degree of Sc.D. in 1936 at the same ceremony at which his son, Francis, received his A.B. Attended the graduate school of Johns Hopkins University during 1906-07; aid, U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey, 1907; Asst. Physics, Wesleyan University, 1908; entered the Bureau of Standards in Washington in 1908, and has been there since that time; assistant Physicist 1910-17; associate physicist 1917-20; physicist 1920-29; principal physicist 1929 to present; exchange physicist, Physikalisches Technische Reichsanstalt in Berlin, Germany, 1931. At present, he is chief of the section of Electro-chemistry and has charge of the primary standards for the international volt and ampere. Has done research on electric arc between metallic electrodes, the silver voltameter; primary and secondary batteries, electrical properties of silver sulphide; standard cells, rectifiers, electrical units and standards. Author: "Storage Batteries", 1924, (second edition 1930, French translation 1936 and third English edition in press, 1940); French edition "Les Accumulateurs Electriques" (Georges Genin, translator) 1936. Has also written about 52 technical and scientific papers on electrical standards, batteries and other electro-chemical bulletins and scientific journals in this and other countries. Received the initial award of the Gaston Plante Medal of the Societe Francaise des Electriciens, presented by the French Ambassador at Washington, 1938. Member of Physics Society; the American Association for Advancement of Science; Electrical Engineers (Chairman, committee on electro-chemistry and electrometal 1924-29; Washington section 1930); Electro-chemical Society (vice president 1930-32); Philosophical Society of Washington; Phi Beta Kappa; Delta Kappa Epsilon; Cosmos Club (Washington). Protestant Episcopal. On November 19, 1913 he married Grace Gertrude Fiegenbaum, daughter of A.H. Fiegenbaum (in War Department 1881 to 1928) and Margaret McKee, natives of Iowa. She was born in Washington, D.C. on June 17, 1883; educated in Washington public schools and Washington Normal School (now called Wilson Teachers College); taught in public schools until

Family 24 - Delia Williams Wood⁶ (daughter of Frances Ellsworth Wood⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 20, page 29) was born September 13, 1820, and died at Lake Mohawk, New York, October 3, 1883. She married on June 20, 1850 Rev. Prof. Chester Smith Lyman, astronomer and physicist, son of Chester and Mary (Smith) Lyman (a descendant of Richard Lyman who settled at Charlestown, Massachusetts, in 1631 and later was one of the first members of the Hartford, Connecticut Colony). He was born in Manchester, Connecticut, on January 13, 1814 and died in New Haven, January 29, 1890. He early showed a fondness for astronomy, acquiring that and kindred sciences without a teacher, constructing, while yet a boy, astronomical and optical apparatus. In 1829 he computed almanacs for the two following years, and also the eclipses of the next fifteen years. He was graduated at Yale in 1837, after which he was head teacher of the school in Ellington, Connecticut, and then studied at Union Theological Seminary in New York and at Yale Theological Seminary during 1839-42. In 1843 he was settled as pastor over the First Congregational Church in New Britain, Connecticut, but failing health compelled him to relinquish this charge, and he spent several years in travel. In 1846-47 he visited the Hawaiian Islands, where for a time he had charge of the Royal School at Honolulu, and explored the volcano Kilauea. He then spent three years in California as a surveyor, being one of the first to send to the eastern states authentic accounts of the discovery of gold on the Pacific Coast. He then returned to New Haven, where he at first was occupied in the revision of "Webster's Dictionary", having charge of the scientific terms in the edition of 1864. In 1858 he became associated in the development of the scientific department of Yale (now the Sheffield Scientific School) and was assigned to the chair of industrial mechanics and physics, which he held till 1871. He then was made Professor of astronomy and physics, and so continued until 1884, and afterwards had charge of astronomy only. His special work included the invention of the combined zenith telescope and transit for latitude, longitude, and time, which was designed and mainly constructed in 1852, and in 1867 he invented and patented an apparatus for illustrating the dynamics of ocean waves. About 1871 he constructed an apparatus for describing acoustic curves, also making improvements in clock escapement, compensating pendulums, and similar apparatus. Prof. Lyman was the first to observe the planet Venus as a delicate luminous ring when seen in close proximity to the sun near inferior conjunction. He was a member of various scientific societies, was President of the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences during 1857-77, and was also an honorary member of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. His writings were confined to scientific papers, which appeared principally in the "American Journal of Science", and in "The New Englander". Received A.M. (honorary) Beloit College in 1864. Had six children:

1. daughter, born and died April 11, 1851.
2. Elizabeth Ellsworth Lyman⁷ born November 11, 1852, died October 22 (~~on 23~~) 1907; married December 9, 1886 Charles Dickerman McCandliss, a scientist, who died of tuberculosis at Pasadena, California, July 3, 1890.
3. William Chester Lyman⁷ born March 15, 1855, died May 24, 1855.
4. Oliver Ellsworth Lyman⁷ born May 10, 1856 at New Haven, Connecticut, graduated Yale 1876; died at Brooklyn September 6, 1884, unmarried.
5. Delia Wood Lyman⁷ born October 3, 1858 - see Family 25, below.
6. Chester Wolcott Lyman⁷ born May 25, 1861 - see Family 26, page 35.

Freeman" (in Scribner's Magazine); "Time and Tommy"; "How Polly Saw the Aprons Grow" (in St. Nicholas); also other articles in magazines and papers. Founded Zeta Alpha Society in Wellesley College. Married in New Haven, on June 10, 1891 Prof. Frank Chamberlin Porter, theologian, who was born at Beloit, Wisconsin, on January 5, 1859, son of Prof. William and Ellen Gertrude (Chapin) Porter (and a descendant of John Porter who came in 1639 and settled at Windsor, Connecticut). He was graduated (A.B.) at Beloit College in 1880; A.M. in 1883; and was a student in the Chicago Theological Seminary in 1881-82. During 1882-84 he taught in the Chicago High School. Subsequently he spent a year at the Hartford Theological Seminary and then attended the Yale Divinity School from which he was graduated (B.D.) in 1886; and three years later received a Ph.D. degree from Yale. During 1889-91 he was instructor in Biblical Theology at the Yale Divinity School and in the latter year was appointed Winkley Professor of Biblical Theology there, retiring in 1927 and assuming the status of professor emeritus. In 1924-25 he was lecturer on theology at Peking (later Yenching) University in China. He gave the Bond lectures at the Bangor (Maine) Theological Seminary in 1907; a course in Apocalyptic Literature in Judaism and Christianity at Haverford College in 1912, and in the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church, Lancaster, Pa. in 1924; a course in "The New Testament and the Theology of Today" at Oberlin Theological Seminary in 1914; and Dudleian lecture at the Harvard Theological Seminary in 1924; and various other lectures and addresses. He is the author of "The Yecer Hara", a study in the Jewish doctrine of sin, in "Biblical and Semitic Studies" (1901); "Messages of the Taylor lectures at Yale published 1930); "Towards a Biblical Theology for the Present" (Contemporary American Theology, 2nd series, 1933); and a number of articles in Hastings "Bible Dictionary" and various journals. As a historical student his specialty is the period before and during the life of Christ, and on the literature of this obscure period he is a recognized authority on both sides of the Atlantic. The honorary degree of D.D. was conferred on him by Beloit College in 1897 and by Yale University in 1931. "Studies in Early Christianity" (1928) edited by Shirley Jackson Case was published in honor of and presented to Dr. Porter and Benjamin Wisner Bacon. He is a member of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis and the Theological Society. His favorite recreations are music, golf and motoring. 1. Lyman Edwards Porter⁸ was born November 7, 1893, A.B. Yale 1916 and M.A. in 1918. Ph.D. thesis "The Chemical Analysis of Gallium". For six months in 1918 he was enlisted in the Chemical Warfare Service and stationed in Washington, D.C. For one year (1920-21) was employed in the Research Laboratory of the Barrett Company at Edgewater, New Jersey. In the fall of 1921 he went to the University of Arkansas as instructor in chemistry, later assistant professor and at present associate professor of chemistry, chemical analysis being his particular field. His writings are restricted to journal articles, particularly about the analysis of some of the less common elements. He is a member of the American Chemical Society, the American Association of University Professors, the Arkansas Academy of Science, the Arkansas Education Association, Alpha Chi Sigma (chemical professional fraternity), Gamma Alpha (graduate scientific fraternity) and Sigma Xi, and an elder in the Central Presbyterian Church in Fayetteville. Family 26 - Chester Wolcott Lyman⁷ (son of Delia Williams Wood⁶, Frances Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 24, page 33) was born in New Haven, Connecticut, May 25, 1861. He was educated in the Hopkins Grammar School, New Haven, and in Yale University, where he was graduated A.B. in 1882, and A.M. in 1895, on completing a special course in electrical science. During 1883-84, as holder of the Clark Scholarship, he studied naval architecture in the Sheffield Scientific School, but in 1888 entered a commercial career, in the employ of W.H. Parsons & Co., paper manufacturers and dealers. He represented this firm in Chicago in 1888-90, and then became associated with the Herkimer (N.Y.) Paper Co., in which he served as a director and manager, until its absorption by the International Paper Co. in 1898. After this reorganization, in which he played an important part, he was assistant to the President until 1916, then becoming vice-president and sales manager. He resigned from the Sales Department in 1923, but continued in the office of Vice President, and as a member of the Board of Directors. Among other corporation offices, he was treasurer of the Continental Paper and Bag Mills, a subsidiary of the International; President of the Umbagog Paper Co., and at the time of his death, vice-president of the American Realty Co., and director of the American Paper Exports Co. and the Empire Bond & Mortgage Corp. He was also secretary and treasurer of the American Paper and Pulp Association and secretary of the Forestry, Water Storage and Manufacturers Association. As an authority on the tariff he represented the paper industry on many occasions before congressional committees, and as a result of his efforts the U.S. Government conducted a special census of the industry in the United States, and an investigation of its conduct in foreign countries. Mr. Lyman wrote numerous articles on paper manufacture and allied subjects for the technical press, contributed an article, "Paper" to the "Encyclopaedia Americana" in 1904, and was the author of one volume, "History of the American Paper & Pulp Association". Throughout his career, he was devoted to the traditions and welfare of Yale University; was one of the founders of the Yale Club of New York; serving constantly on its committees; was active in organizing class reunions, and in 1910, in memory of his father, established an annual lectureship on water storage conservation in the Sheffield Scientific School. He was also a member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers; the American Assn. for the Advancement of Science, the Yale Engineering Society; the American Forestry Assn. (director 1911-22) the Sons of the American Revolution; the Home Market Club (v.p.) of Boston, City Midday and University Clubs of N.Y.C., Graduates' Club of New Haven, and Piping Rock Club of Long Island. He was married in New York, February 26, 1915 to Marguerite Buhler Couleru, of Paris, France. He died in Boston, Massachusetts, April 7, 1926.

Family 29 - DELIA ELLSWORTH⁵ (youngest daughter of Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see page 13) was born July 23, 1879, and died June 24, 1840; married January 7, 1812 Hon. Thomas Scott Williams, jurist, son of Ezekiel and Prudence (Stoddard) Williams. He was born in Wethersfield, Connecticut, on June 26, 1777 and died in Hartford, Connecticut on December 15, 1861. (A brother to Ezekiel Williams who married Abigail Ellsworth, Family 1) He was privately tutored by Azel Backus, and graduated from Yale College in 1794. He studied law at the Litchfield Law School under Judge Tapping Reeve, who is reported to have said that Williams was the best scholar ever sent from Litchfield. He continued his legal training in the office of Zephaniah Swift at Windham, Connecticut, was admitted to the bar in 1799 and commenced the practice of law in Mansfield, Connecticut. In 1803 he removed to Hartford where he soon became prominent in his profession. He held many public offices: he was a representative in the Connecticut General Assembly in the sessions of 1813, 1815, 1816; during the last two years serving as clerk of the House; he was a member of Congress from 1817 to 1819; he was again a member of the Connecticut Legislature in 1819, 1825 and from 1827 to 1829; and was mayor of Hartford from 1831 to 1835. In May 1829 he was appointed an associate justice of the supreme court of errors of the state and in 1834 chief justice, which office he held until May 1847 when, about to reach the age of retirement, he resigned. His career was also distinguished because of his interest in public and charitable affairs. He served from 1840 until his death as president of the American Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, for a few years he was vice-president of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; and from May 1848 until his death he was president of the American Tract Society. He became a member of the First Church of Hartford in 1834 and served as deacon from 1836 until his death and as teacher in its Sunday School from 1834 to 1861. He gave liberally to charity and to Yale College during his life and by will at his death. He married second on November 1, 1842 Martha Manwaring Coit, daughter of Elisha and Rebecca S. (Manwaring) Coit. She died in 1867. There were no children by either marriage.

Williams' judicial opinions appear in 7-18 "Connecticut Reports". They include a pamphlet entitled "Chief Justice Williams on the Maine Law, its Expediency and Constitutionality" published in Hartford about 1851, being a report of a committee of which he was chairman on the subject of a law for the suppression of intemperance; an address entitled "The Tract Society and Slavery" (1859), defense of the conduct of the American Tract Society in refusing to distribute pamphlets opposed to slavery; and an address as president of the Tract Society at its anniversary in 1852. Both in practice and on the bench Williams was distinguished for his methodical habits, his common sense, his thorough study and mastery of his subject and the eminent uprightness and purity of his character. A discriminating review of his career by John Hooker states that, while other jurists and lawyers may have been more distinguished for their store of legal learning, few had stood higher in professional opinion for the soundness and impartiality of their judgment. Interment in the Old North Cemetery, Hartford, Connecticut.

Family 30 - WILLIAM WOLCOTT ELLSWORTH⁵ (son of Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see page 13) lawyer, congressman, governor, was born in Windsor, Connecticut, on November 10, 1791 and died in Hartford, Connecticut on January 15, 1868 - the twin brother of Henry Leavitt Ellsworth (Family 49). He attended Yale College, graduating with honors in 1810. He then entered the Litchfield Law School conducted by Judges Reeve & Gould. Completing his studies there, he moved to Hartford where he entered the law office of Judge Thomas Scott Williams, his brother-in-law (preceding page). He applied himself industriously to his work, and is reported to have kept himself well informed on the most recent decisions of American and English law. In 1813 he was admitted to the Hartford Bar. Four years later, when Judge Williams was sent to Congress, Ellsworth was given charge of his superior's law office. From 1829 to 1834, Ellsworth himself was a member of Congress from Connecticut. He might have enjoyed a longer term in Washington but he resigned the legislative position of his own accord, it is said, in order to return to law practise. While in Congress he served on the judiciary committee, and as a member of that body was active in preparing measures to carry into effect Jackson's plan for resisting South Carolina nullification.

In political sentiments, Ellsworth was an enthusiastic Whig. He favored a protective tariff, and government aid for internal improvements. Reentering active politics as governor of Connecticut in 1838, he served four successive years. His administration coincided with the beginning of railroad transportation in the state, and in his messages to the legislature, he strove to encourage the further development of railroads and manufactures. He also favored the extension of banks, and state aid for the improvement of schools. Although advocating numerous progressive measures, he was essentially a conservative politician. "The time has come," he declared in 1838, "when experiments upon our dearest interests are no longer to be tolerated; and when experience, that great and unerring teacher in human affairs, is to resume her influence, and put to silence visionary politicians." After his period of service as governor, Ellsworth again resumed his law practise. In 1847 he was made an associate judge of the state supreme court, which position he held until obliged because of old age, to retire in 1861.

In personal appearance, Ellsworth was tall and graceful, and dignified in manner. His portrait, in the state library at Hartford, suggests to the observer an embodiment of a typical Connecticut Yankee, equally able to trade horses, make a political speech, and offer prayer. Throughout his public career, Ellsworth was in much demand as a speaker. To innumerable political rallies in the forties, he poured forth that type of blustering oratory so dear to middle 19th Century audiences. For 47 years he was deacon in the Hartford Centre Church, and an intimate friend of the popular preacher of the time, Joel Hawes. He was also active in aiding philanthropic institutions, especially the American Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, and the Hartford Retreat for the Insane. By no means a great man, Ellsworth was successful in a moderate way. He always enjoyed general confidence and respect. He was married on September 14, 1813, to Emily Scholten Webster, eldest daughter of the lexicographer, Noah Webster, and his wife, Rebecca Greenleaf. She was born at Hartford, Connecticut, August 4, 1790 and died August 23, 1861. They had six children, all born at Hartford, Connecticut:

1. Pinckney Webster Ellsworth, M.D.⁶ born December 5, 1814 - see Families 31-36, pages 39-41.

Family 31 - Pinckney Webster Ellsworth, M.D.⁶ (son of William Wolcott Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴, see Family 30, above) was born at Hartford, Connecticut, December 5, 1814, and died from a paralytic stroke November 29, 1896. He graduated from Yale College in 1836; took up the study of medicine and attended medical schools in Philadelphia and New York, graduating from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York with the degree of M.D. in 1839. His medical studies were afterwards continued in Paris, London and Dublin. He settled in Hartford in 1843 and began to practise his profession, becoming in a few years one of the leading surgeons of the state. He was the first to perform a surgical operation with the use of anaesthetics, outside of a dental office. He was in partnership with Dr. Amariah Brigham, who became subsequently superintendent of the Retreat for the Insane in Hartford, and later superintendent of the Insane Asylum at Utica, New York. Dr. Ellsworth was for a considerable time one of the visiting physicians of the Retreat. He was one of the organizers and a prominent member of the City Medical Society of Hartford, and a leading member of the Hartford County and Connecticut Medical Societies, and honorary member of the New York State Medical Society. During the Civil War, he was appointed brigade surgeon by Governor Buckingham, and served on the staff of General Isaac T. Stevens of the Army of the Potomac, who was shot and killed at the head of his command in the second battle of Bull Run. Dr. Ellsworth was examiner of recruits for the service, and made personal examination of about nine thousand soldiers. Later he held the office of pension examiner, in Connecticut, for nine years under Presidents Johnson, Grant and Cleveland. He was a member of the Centre Church of Hartford for over fifty years. In politics he was always independent and never sought public office of any kind, and even in the church he always declined to hold office. A lifelong student, not only of medical, but of theological and philosophical subjects, his learning was profound. He was especially interested in reading and comparing the Greek scriptures. He wrote a number of papers on his theological research and published "Immanuel, God with Us", etc. He married first October 11, 1842 Julia Sterling, who was born March 29, 1823, daughter of Ezra Sterling of Bridgeport, Connecticut, and who died March 18, 1854. He married second December 9, 1857 Julia Townshend Dow, daughter of Lucius K. Dow. She was born at New Haven, March 5, 1837. He had eight children, all born at Hartford, Connecticut:

1. William Sterling Ellsworth⁷ born August 11, 1849; died April 16, 1852.

Family 37 - Emily Ellsworth⁶ (daughter of William Wolcott Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴, see Family 30, page 38) was born September 27, 1816 and died at Hartford, Connecticut, on July 1, 1853. She married April 27, 1841 Rev. Abner Jackson, D.D., LL.D. of Meadville, Pa., 8th President (1867-74) of Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut. He was born near Washington, Pa., on November 4, 1811, the son of _____ and Sarah (Brownlee) Jackson. He entered Washington and Jefferson College at Washington, Pa., but completed his collegiate course at Washington (Trinity) Hartford, and was graduated in 1837 at the head of his class. He served as a tutor for one year, finished his theological studies in 1838, and was ordained, then became adjunct professor of ancient languages, and in 1840 was made professor of intellectual and moral philosophy, being the first to occupy the chair, which he retained until 1858. During this period he also lectured on chemistry and gave instruction in Latin. In 1858 he was elected president of Hobart College, and professor of the evidences of Christianity in that institution. Nine years later (1867), he was elected president of Trinity College, and professor of ethics and metaphysics. A period of prosperity now set in; for the first time in the history of the college, the undergraduates numbered one hundred; large gifts were received from Chester Adams and Isaac Toucey, both of Hartford, and in 1872 the college grounds were sold to the state as a site for a new capitol, the college reserving the right to use the land, Jarvis and Seabury halls, and a part of Brownell hall (if possible) for five or six years longer. President Jackson visited England during the summer vacation for the purpose of studying collegiate architecture, and made a second visit in 1873, securing from Mr. Burgess, an English architect, plans for buildings comprising four large quadrangles, secular Gothic in style, of an early French type. In 1873 a new site for the college was purchased, about eighty acres in extent and situated on the slope of a bluff about a mile south of the old location. President Jackson, in addition to his college work, officiated for a time as rector of the Episcopal Church, West Hartford. He received the degree of D.D. from Trinity College in 1858 and that of LL.D. from Columbia College in 1866. A posthumous volume of sermons appeared in 1875. He died at Hartford, Conn., April 19, 1874. (Source: "The National Cyclopaedia of American Biography", Vol. III, page 497)

1. Emily Elizabeth Jackson⁷ born at Hartford, Connecticut, November 12, 1845; member, Daughters of the American Revolution #3610; was very active in various civic affairs and particularly in the work of the Episcopal Church, died at Geneva, New York, August 10, 1935; married April 8, 1869 Philip Norborne Nicholas, a lawyer, born at Geneva, New York, on March 26, 1845, the son of John Nicholas of Virginia and Virginia Gallagher of New York City. He was trustee of Hobart College and Secretary of the Board. He died October 20, 1919 at Geneva. Both are buried at Glenwood Cemetery. No children. Resided in Geneva, New York.
2. Edith Jackson⁷ born at Hartford, Connecticut, July 29, 1852; died at Hartford, January 11, 1861.

Family 38 - Harriet Ellsworth⁶ (daughter of William Wolcott Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴, see Family 30, page 38) was born July 4, 1818, died February 24, 1848; married December 23, 1845 Rev. Russell S. Cook, clergyman. He was born at New Marlboro, Massachusetts, on March 6, 1811, and died at Pleasant Valley, New York, September 4, 1864. After a diligent childhood, he set out on the study of law. His main interest shifting to religion, he entered the theological seminary at Auburn, New York, and in January 1837 became pastor of the Congregational Church at Lanesboro, Massachusetts. Trouble with his throat caused him in 1838 to abandon the ministry and engage in work for the American Tract Society. Cook brought to it a new spirit -- a tireless and explosive determination not only to disseminate publications but to implant principles everywhere, and instantly. He was corresponding secretary in 1839. During his term of office he put into circulation more than a million volumes. He visited here and there over the widest areas, encouraging sales by appeal sometimes to pure rivalry and sometimes to pure altruism. He merged (1843) the bi-monthly, Trust Magazine, with his new monthly, American Messenger, and in twelve years increased the circulation from 10,000 to 200,000 copies, not counting 2,500 copies in German. He instituted The Child Paper in 1852 and in two years was printing 300,000 copies. He popularized "colportage", a system by which evangelical itinerants went about the sparsely settled country selling books where possible and giving them away if that course seemed preferable. The scheme was suited to the America of 1841 in which it originated, but it was also adopted in parts of Europe. The Tract Society was widely condemned in the fifties for its evasive attitude regarding slavery, and indeed, while from a large viewpoint its course may have been defensible, it was actually chosen in smaller and tangible matters to have handled facts loosely. Cook did not find time to reply. Personally, he was moving hither and thither, like a shuttle, about America, and in 1853 and 1856 he visited Europe, during his second visit in Switzerland, he was seized with an affection of the lungs which necessitated his resigning from his duties with the Tract Society, but, returning home, he still devoted much energy to a Committee for a Better Observation of the Sabbath, with headquarters in New York. He fought his disease stubbornly, visiting in search of relief now Florida, now Maine. He was married four times: to Ann Maria Mills of Auburn in 1837; to Harriet Newell Rand of Pompey Hill, New York, in 1841; (to Harriet Ellsworth in 1845) and to a Miss Malan. No children.

Family 39 - Oliver Ellsworth⁶ (son of William Wolcott Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴, see Family 30, page 38) born December 13, 1820 (first cousin to Annie Goodrich Ellsworth⁶, Family 63) a merchant, spent ten years in commercial business on the Pacific Coast, living at one time at Quito. Was agent for Howland and Aspinwall on the Isthmus of Panama and was engaged for several years in book publishing business in Boston, Massachusetts. Member, Society of Mayflower Descendants. He married first, June 14, 1854 Caroline Cleveland Smith (first cousin to Roswell Chamberlain Smith, Family 63) born December 18, 1829, only daughter of Roswell C. Smith, the author of many geographical books, and his wife, Lois Cleveland Cady. She died at Hartford, Connecticut, on July 31, 1866. He married second, August 12, 1868, Mary Wolcott Janvrin, born September 16, 1830. She was educated at an academy in Exeter, N.H., and early began to use her pen. When eighteen, she wrote a story entitled "Children's Vows" for which she received a prize from a prominent Boston publisher, which encouraged her to make literature her avocation. Her work was favorably received; she contributed to Western and Southern journals and was a regular contributor to "Godey's Ladies Book". In 1856 she aided and wrote biographical articles for "Cypress Leaves", published by James Usher, Boston; in 1858 she was engaged in compiling for French & Co., publisher, Boston, a series of books entitled the "Juvenile Miscellany". She was author of "Peace, or the Stolen Will" (1857), "An Hour with the Children" (American Tract Society, 1860) and "Smith's Saloon", or "The Grays and the Grunts" (1871). She died at Newton, Massachusetts, August 12, 1870. (Source: Vol. XI, page 492, The National Cyclopaedia of American Biography) He married third, November 15, 1871 Orah A. Janvrin, born February 1, 1836, sister to his second wife. Both were born at Exeter, N.H., daughters of Joseph Adams and Lydia Anna (Colcord) Janvrin. He died at El Moro, Colorado, while on his way to New Mexico on November 10, 1878.

Family 40 - William Webster Ellsworth⁷ (son of Oliver Ellsworth⁶, William Wolcott Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴, see Family 39, above) was born at Hartford, Connecticut, October 30, 1855. He was educated at private schools in Boston, Massachusetts, and while never having attended college, was honored by the honorary degree, Doctors of Letters, from Whitman College in the state of Washington. He came to New York in 1878 when he entered the employ of Scribner's Monthly, which became the Century Magazine. From 1891 to 1913 he served as secretary of the Century Publishing Company, in the latter year he was honored with the presidency, which position he held until his retirement in 1915. Thereafter he devoted his time to lecturing, specializing in American history and English literature; each lecture was illustrated with upwards of one hundred slides, for the most part in color, with reproductions of many rare prints and manuscripts. He was an authority in his particular field and his lectures were delivered in more than 115 colleges and many preparatory schools. He was the author of "A Golden Age of Authors" in 1919; "Creative Writings" in 1929 and edited "Readings from the New Poets" in 1928. He enjoyed the intimate friendship of many distinguished persons including General Grant, Mark Twain, Rudyard Kipling, Jack London, Kate Douglas Wiggin, William Gillette, William Dean Howells and George W. Cable. He was a member of the Century Club, the Players of New York, Society of Mayflower Descendants, Sons of the American Revolution, and a Special Corresponding Member of the New York Genealogical & Biographical Society. He died at Charlotte Hungerford Hospital in Torrington, Connecticut, on Monday, December 18, 1936. On June 4, 1878 in Hartford, he married Helen Yale Smith, daughter of Morris Woodward and Julia Ann (Palmer) Smith, of Stonington, Conn. She was born June 5, 1855 and is a member of the Republican Club of New York. Home: Esperanza Farm, New Hartford, Connecticut. She died September 13, 1945.

Family 48 - HENRY LEAVITT ELLSWORTH⁵ (son of Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴, see page 13) was born at Windsor, Connecticut, on November 10, 1791, and died December 27, 1858. He was a twin brother to William Wolcott Ellsworth, Family 30. After graduation from Yale in 1810, he studied law at the Litchfield Law School. On June 22, 1813 he married Nancy Allen Goodrich born January 1, 1793 and died January 14, 1847, the daughter of Judge Elizur and Anne Willard (Allen) Goodrich of New Haven, and settled in Windsor, Connecticut. He practised law and engaged also in agriculture, in which he early showed a special interest, serving as secretary of the Hartford County Agricultural Society in 1818. He moved to Hartford in June 1819, and from August 1819 to March 1821 was president of the Aetna Insurance Co. He became prominent in business and civic affairs and in the improvement of real estate did much for the prosperity of Hartford. In 1832 he was appointed by President Jackson as commissioner to superintend the settlement of the Indian tribes transplanted to the south and west of Arkansas. On his way West in the same year he accidentally met Washington Irving, Charles Joseph Latrobe and Count Pourtales, who were travelling together. All three decided to accompany Commissioner Ellsworth. It was thus that Irving obtained his material "A Tour on the Prairies" (1835). The impressions of Latrobe are recorded in "The Rambler in North America" (1835), and those of Ellsworth in a manuscript letter to his wife containing 116 pages, which letter is now in Yale University Library.

In April 1835 he was elected mayor of Hartford. He resigned however on June 15, having been appointed by President Jackson as U.S. Commissioner of Patents. He developed the business of the office in a remarkable manner. From the first he took a special interest in agriculture, and largely through his influence, Congress was induced in 1839 to make an appropriation for the purpose of collecting and distributing seeds, prosecuting agricultural investigations, and procuring agricultural statistics. This was the first government appropriation for agriculture. Similar appropriations were made in 1842 and subsequent years. Since the Commissioner's annual reports were filled with information for the farms of the country, the Patent Office by 1845 had assumed in many respects the function of an agricultural bureau and Ellsworth is now frequently referred to as the "father of the Department of Agriculture". While serving as commissioner of patents he aided his friend, Samuel F. B. Morse in obtaining the congressional appropriation of $30,000 to test the practicability of the telegraph. On April 30, 1845 he resigned from the Patent Office, and subsequently established himself in Lafayette, Indiana, as an agent for the purchase and settlement of public lands becoming one of the largest landowners in the West. He was one of the earliest to foretell the value of the prairie lands and gave a great impulse to the agricultural operation of that region. He also advocated the use of machinery in agriculture -- an idea at that time considered chimerical. He probably used the first mowing machine ever introduced upon the prairies. His principal writings were his official publications as commissioner of patents, particularly his annual reports, 1837-44, and "A Digest of Patents issued by the U.S. 1790-1841" (2 vols. 1840-42).

His health failing, he returned to Connecticut in April 1858, and settled in Fair Haven, where he died a few months later. Mrs. Ellsworth died January 14, 1847, and Ellsworth was married a second time to Marietta Mariana Bartlett who died April 17, 1856. He next married Catherine Smith of Durham, Connecticut, who survived him. By his will his residuary estate in Western lands was bequeathed to Yale University. He was a genial and affable man, of fine character, great public spirit and vision, with a deep love for humanity.

Family 49 - Henry William Ellsworth⁶ (son of Henry Leavitt Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 48, above) was born at Windsor, Connecticut, April 7, 1814 and died August 14, 1864; lawyer and diplomat. He received his early education at the Ellington School at Windsor and at Hartford, Connecticut. In 1830 he proceeded to Yale, where he graduated in 1834, subsequently studying for a short time in the law school there. In 1836 he went to Lafayette, Tippecanoe Co., Indiana, in which neighborhood his father had acquired large tracts of land from the government. Opening a law office in Lafayette, the younger Ellsworth also became a member of the firm of Curtiss & Ellsworth, general land agents, specializing in Wabash and Maumee Valley lands, and, on his father's removal to Washington, D.C., to become commissioner of patents, assumed charge of the latter's extensive Western interests. In 1838 he published "Valley of the Upper Wabash, Indiana, with Hints on its Agricultural Advantages, etc." showing much information obtained from his father's papers, and this work combined with his influential Eastern connections, helped to stimulate active interest in north-western lands on the part of both speculators and bona fide settlers. He also wrote "The American Swine Breeder, a Practical Treatise on the Selection, Rearing and Fattening of Swine" (1840) and was an occasional contributor to the Knickerbacker Magazine.

At the same time he participated in the political struggles of the time, was prominent among the supporters of Polk in the election campaign of 1844, and was a presidential elector in that year. On April 19, 1845, he was appointed by President Polk charge d'affaires to Sweden and Norway. The duties of this position he performed with ability for over four years, but his diplomatic career was brought to a close by an episode the implications of which are even today doubtful. Early in 1849 charges were made in the European and home press that in December 1848 Ellsworth had connived at an attempt to smuggle British goods into Sweden, and the facts disclosed in an ex parte investigation prima facie supported the allegation. In consequence Secretary of State Clayton recalled him as of April 23, 1849, the "President believing that the public service requires a change in the Swedish mission". Ellsworth protested and vigorously defended himself, and a rather pathetic appeal was made to President Taylor by influential public men on his behalf, but in vain; and following a stern letter from Clayton his appointment was terminated July 25, 1849. On returning to the United States he resumed law practise at Lafayette and later in Indianapolis. A large circle of acquaintances evinced their unimpaired belief in his integrity, and he was retained by his father's intimate friend, S. F. B. Morse, in the actions which Morse took to protect his patent rights. His health, never good, broke down, and he was compelled to relinquish his practise, returning to New Haven, Connecticut, where he died at the early age of fifty. He was married on January 11, 1844 to Mary E. West, born May 10, 1817 at Salem, Massachusetts, and died August 24, 1869. They had six children:

1. Henry Goodrich Ellsworth⁷ born December 13, 1844, see Family 50, page 52.

Henry Leavitt Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 50, page 51) was born in Indianapolis, Indiana, on January 4, 1855. Her early life was spent in Indianapolis and in Sweden where her father was minister during the administration of President James Buchanan. The old, white-pillared family homestead stood for many years on the present site of the Indiana World War Memorial in Indianapolis. Following her father's death, the family lived in Lafayette. She was interested in many private and public philanthropic and cultural movements. She was an officer and member of the Monday Club, the Free Kindergarten, the Industrial School, Community House and other clubs and civic groups in Lafayette. She was also a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution (#4096) and the Indiana Historical Society. She was the first woman in the United States ever to have been a vestryman in the Episcopal Church, and was an active member of St. John's Episcopal Church. Her activities continued during the later years of her life. After she was 70 years old she participated in the Lafayette Centennial and initiated various projects to improve the parks and river banks in Lafayette. Except for community interests her greatest activity was in the feminist movement. In 1916 she became a member of the board of directors of the Woman's Franchise League of Indiana and continued until women's suffrage was granted and the organization became the Indiana League of Women Voters. She was a member and officer of the latter organization from May 1919 to May 1927. She was the first president of the Tippecanoe County League of Women Voters and held that office from 1919 until 1932 when she became honorary president. She died in the Methodist Hospital on March 1937. She resided at Earlhurst, Lafayette, Indiana. On September 2 (or 3), 1878 she married Thomas Arthur Stuart (brother to William Vaughn Stuart - see Family 4) who was born at Logansport, Indiana, March 29, 1853 and died at Lafayette, Indiana, August 6, 1892, the son of Judge William Z. and Sarah (Benedict) Stuart. He was graduated from Amherst College in 1874; studied law in the Columbia Law School in New York City and in 1876 located at Lafayette, where he began practice as a junior member of the firm Coffroth & Stuart. Later he became member of the firm of Stuart Brothers, his two associates being his brothers, Charles B. Stuart and William Vaughn Stuart. His death came at the early age of 39. Nevertheless he had reached a high rank in his profession and he participated in the trial of many important cases throughout northern Indiana. Outside of his profession his chief civic interest was in the cause of education, for he served as a member of the Lafayette School Board. 1. Marie Stuart⁸ was born September 11, 1880 at Lafayette, Indiana, graduated Smith College '01, member of the Daughters of the American Revolution #34721; A.A.U.M., Colonial Dames and Indiana Pioneers, and is very much interested in the Drama League and various Art Clubs. She was associated in business with her husband and while he went to war, ran their furniture factory which specialized in reproductions. In recent years she spent some time as consulting stylist for a large department store in Lafayette, Indiana, which she gave up in the Spring of 1940. Her main interest is the League of Women Voters, preceded by participation in the Suffrage movement. She was State President of the Indiana Franchise League and is still a member, after twenty-six years on the National American Woman's Suffrage Association Board, which will not be defunct until some residuary bequests are disposed of. She was one of the organizers and an officer for several years in the National League of Women Voters. Has ever since been a state officer and local officer with no abatement of either her interest or her activity in regard to it - organizing, speaking and working for it all over the country in all of this time. At present she is serving her second term on the Indiana State Board of Public Welfare. She was the first woman member on the Peru School Board and the first woman member on the State Board of Education; has served on the Indiana Commission making survey of defectives, dependents and delinquents in Indiana and during the periods in which she lived in Chicago, Menominee, Sault Ste. Marie, Rochester, New York, as well as Peru, has been very much interested and active in Child Welfare work, Settlement work and Pure Milk crusades. She has also served for seven years on the Miami County Board of Childrens Guardians and County Charities. On October 11, 1904, she married Richard Elbert Edwards, Jr. He was born in 1880; A.B. and M.A. at Harvard. Is now putting all of his attention on his farms. Reside: 50 North Hood Street, Peru, Indiana.

a. Richard Elbert Edwards III ⁹ (has dropped his middle name, calling himself Richard Edwards III) was born in Chicago, Illinois, May 14, 1909; graduated Harvard; and is now Assistant Treasurer of the National Surety Corporation in New York. He married Eloise Peck of Moline, Illinois.

2. Allison Ellsworth Stuart ⁸ was born April 18, 1886; A.B. 1908, Princeton University; Northwestern University Law School; partner, law firm, Stuart, Stuart & Devoil, 801-809 Lafayette Life Building, Lafayette, Indiana; Vice president, Lafayette Savings Bank. Family 52 - Edward Augustus Ellsworth ⁶ (son of Henry Leavitt Ellsworth ⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth ⁴ - see Family 48, page 50) was born in the fall of 1817 (baptized April 10, 1818) and died in Lafayette, Indiana in 1837. When eighteen, he left Yale in his Sophomore year in order to accompany his father, who had been sent by President Jackson as head of a commission to remove the Indians west of the Mississippi. The party proceeded to Arkansas, which at that time was a forest wilderness and inhabited by Indians almost exclusively, and made a halt of some duration at the White River, in which vicinity Judge McCamy resided. While here, Edward fell in love with Jane McCamy and in 1835 married her. She was born in Huntsville, Alabama, on December 25, 1817. When but a few years old, her father moved to Tennessee and thence soon after to Arkansas. She grew into strong and vigorous womanhood under the fostering care of her father. The young couple made their home at Lafayette, Indiana, occupying a small log house in that frontier trading town. Death took the young bridegroom in 1837, before the birth of his daughter. His widow went to Washington to live with her father-in-law, who was then Commissioner of Patents. While residing in the Capital, she moved in the highest society and was intimately acquainted with the family and officers of President Harrison and Polk. In 1843, she returned to Lafayette, Indiana, where she married second Elias Lyman Beard, born in Lyons, Wayne County, New York, October 15, 1816. When quite young, he was taken by his parents to Jackson County, Michigan, and in the following year to Peru, Miami County, Indiana, where he assisted his father who was a contractor. Later he took contracts for himself, among these enterprises was the construction of the Wabash & Erie Canal. In 1836 he settled in Lafayette, Indiana, where he engaged in grain and saw milling, being shipper of the first load of grain on the above mentioned aqueduct. Later he engaged in the pork-packing trade and owned a stone quarry. To him goes the honor of having shipped the first load of corn from the state of Indiana to the New York market. In 1844 he built for the Government the splendid docks of the Navy Yard at Memphis, Tennessee. He then returned to his home in Lafayette and continued his milling, quarrying and mercantile pursuits until he decided to tempt fortune on the Pacific Coast. Leaving Indiana in February 1849, he proceeded to New Orleans and there took ship for Matamoras, whence he made the journey across Mexico to Mazatlan, at which place he secured passage on board the Government boat "Edith", and arrived in San Francisco in May 1849. After passing a month's travel through portions of California, he finally settled in Mission San Jose in June of that year, and became largely interested with John M. Horner in land there. It was a bold venture at the time -- this purchase of some 30,000 acres -- the Pico interest in the Mission Grant. The title to the land was so uncertain that it was a great risk to lay out money on it. Fences had to be made of wire and the miles and miles required of it cost a great deal of money. Farming implements too were expensive and the price of labor was very high. Of course the interest on money was high also and the result of the farming experiment was considered at that time very uncertain. All flour, as well as other supplies, were being imported from the East and there were as yet no mills to grind wheat in California, if it could be grown. But Mr. Beard was a man for large enterprises, and of indomitable courage, and in spite of all obstacles and risks he entered upon the business of grain and fruit raising on what then seemed to be a magnificent scale, and the result fully justified the soundness of his judgment and demonstrated the agricultural capabilities of the country. In 1852 he had 640 acres of grain that yielded on the average 56 bushels to the acre. His yield of potatoes was 60,000 bushels -- an average for the most part 330 bushels to the acre. According to Rev. Dr. Willey in the "Pacific" on May 19, 1880, the size of these potatoes was something marvelous. It was common to find some of three pounds weight and frequently those weighing from three to five pounds. He says "I remember during one day at Mr. Beard's when there were nine of us grown persons at the table and a single potato weighing four pounds served us all and there was plenty left for three persons who came afterward, and both the quality and the flavor were unexceptionable." The Mission orchard inclosure then comprised fifteen acres. Besides vines, fig trees, olives, peach and quince trees, there were in this orchard 350 full grown pear trees. The yield of one of the largest of these trees was 1500 lbs. of fruit, the gross income from which was $400. The gross receipts from the vineyard in the year 1851 were $16,000. So great were his hopes in the future of California, that he invested all his means in partial payments upon ranches, and the depression in values which soon followed swept away all his accumulations, and left him a poor man. In the year of 1858 he took charge of the Mariposa Estate in connection with General Fremont, but his undertaking proved a failure. He then contracted to purchase a mile square of land embracing the now town of Salinas, expending largely in fencing and putting in a crop of wheat, but the season proved unfruitful and he lost his investment. In 1865, he and his step-son, Henry Goodrich Ellsworth, procured a perfected title by patent from the United States to 6,000 acres of land and were again the possessors of a competency. But not content with this, Mr. Beard's sanguine disposition led him into sundry enterprises, embracing an attempt to develop an oil well at Matole, Humboldt County, and to open mines in various parts of the country. After speculations, all of which proved unsuccessful, he made an attempt to recuperate these losses by dealing in mining stocks, which finally swept away his entire fortune. He died May 8, 1880, and she died March 3, 1887 at Niles, California. She had a son, John L. Beard, by her second marriage.

1. The first part of the paper discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that proper record-keeping is essential for the success of any business or organization. The author argues that without reliable records, it is impossible to make informed decisions or to track progress over time.

2. The second part of the paper focuses on the challenges of data collection and analysis. It highlights the need for standardized methods and the importance of ensuring the quality and integrity of the data. The author also discusses the role of technology in facilitating data collection and the potential for automation in this process. Furthermore, the paper touches upon the ethical considerations surrounding data usage and the importance of transparency in data handling.

3. The third part of the paper explores the various applications of data analysis in different fields. It provides examples of how data has been used to improve healthcare outcomes, optimize business operations, and understand social trends. The author suggests that as the volume of data continues to grow, the need for advanced analytical tools and techniques will also increase.

4. The fourth part of the paper discusses the future of data science and the potential for new discoveries. It mentions the growing importance of artificial intelligence and machine learning in data analysis. The author concludes by emphasizing the need for continued research and innovation in this field to fully harness the power of data.

5. The fifth part of the paper provides a summary of the key points discussed and offers some final thoughts on the importance of data in the modern world. The author encourages readers to stay informed about the latest developments in data science and to consider the implications of data for their own work and lives.

6. The sixth part of the paper is a conclusion that reiterates the main findings and the author's perspective on the future of data science. It serves as a final call to action for the reader to engage with the data-driven world around them.

Family 53 - Henry Goodrich Ellsworth⁷ (son of Edward Augustus Ellsworth⁶, Henry Leavitt Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 52, page 55) was born October 27, 1835 at Lafayette, Indiana, and died at Niles, California, on November 26, 1897. After passing his early boyhood days on the banks of the Wabash at Lafayette, Indiana, and later at Washington, D.C., at the age of seventeen he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama in the summer of 1851; whence his step-father, Elias Lyman Beard, had removed in the first rush of the early pioneers. Mr. Beard had settled at the Mission of San Jose in the midst of the beautiful Santa Clara valley, then grazed over by countless herds of cattle, and had already entered upon agricultural operations on a large scale. After spending some months in preparation for Yale College, the allurements of material wealth proved too much for his desire for higher education and, stimulated by the example of his step-father, Mr. Ellsworth obtained a patent to a tract of over 6,000 acres lying below the Mission and comprising the choicest portion of the Santa Clara Valley. Here for many years these gentlemen successfully farmed the virgin soil. But the thirst for mining speculation which proved the ruin of so many pioneers at last excited the mind of Mr. Beard to unfortunate investments, which resulted in the loss of almost this entire princely domain. The blow was too severe, and worn out by the struggle, Mr. Beard passed away in 1880. Mr. Ellsworth then removed to Niles, where he purchased lands at the mouth of Niles Canyon and once again began transforming them into orchards until before his death he had succeeded in accomplishing one of the finest and most productive ranches in this state. (About two hundred acres of this old ranch still remain in possession of the family.) An ardent lover of horticultural pursuits, he took a great pride in the development of his property and never had the desire, though often the opportunity, for other more public employments. Whatever he did, he did thoroughly and his reputation as an orchardist was known and recognized throughout the country. On April 26, 1866 in San Francisco, California, he married Harriet Pierce Bryant, daughter of Oliver and Susan (Richards) Bryant. She was born January 17, 1845 in Northampton, Massachusetts, and died January 27, 1926 at Niles, California. Following her mother's death in 1858, she made her home with her aunt and uncle, Ira Packard Rankin, then collector of customs for the port of San Francisco. They had six children:

Family 54 - Oliver Ellsworth⁸ (son of Henry Goodrich Ellsworth⁷, Edward Augustus Ellsworth⁶, Henry Leavitt Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 53, above) (name originally Oliver Bryant Ellsworth) was born in Mission San Jose, California, on April 7, 1867, and died in Oakland, California, on November 1, 1939. He graduated (A.B.) from the University of California in 1888 and from Hastings Law School in 1891. As a lawyer, he was successful from the start. He has been prominently identified with matters of litigation in connection with Mutual Building and Loan Associations and other similar institutions where technicalities of law were involved. He was attorney for the Stewart Fruit Company, the largest fruit shipping concern of its kind in the State and other important corporations. He was also actively interested in the development of California oil properties, being president of two companies operating in the Kern River field, and has had considerable to do with the settlement of legal points bearing on the "lien land selection" in relation to oil property, with regard to which a case was carried to the United States Supreme Court and resulted in victory for the oil men. After the San Francisco earthquake and fire of 1906, he moved his law office to Oakland where he remained until 1909, then returned to San Francisco with offices in the Mills Building. Upon coming to Oakland, he became actively interested in local public affairs and served two terms as a member of the city council, during one term of which he was president of that body. In 1914, he was elected mayor of Piedmont, and was re-elected for each term without opposition and without campaigning, being in Europe during one election. He was particularly interested in zoning problems and had led Piedmont in moves which kept it a city of homes. He is credited with leadership in making Piedmont "the only city in California and perhaps in the West" that has only single family dwellings. He was a member of Piedmont Lodge No. 521, A.F. & A.M., Oakland Consistory, A.A.S.R.; Aahnes Temples, A.A.O.N.-M.S.; the Commonwealth Club of San Francisco and the Mt. Diablo Country Club as well as the National, State and San Francisco Bar Associations. He was also a director of the Globe Mutual Building & Loan Association of San Francisco. ON May 26, 1897 he married Lillian Mastick, daughter of Joseph Mastick and granddaughter of E.B. Mastick, president of the Board of Trustees of the Lick Estate. Since his death, their home in Piedmont, California, has been sold, and she resides at Claremont Hotel, Berkeley, California. Summer home: Carmel, California.

Family 59 - Ellen Augusta Ellsworth⁷ (daughter of Edward Augustus Ellsworth⁶, Henry Leavitt Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 52, page 55) was born at Lafayette, Indiana, April 1, 1838; died at Buffalo, New York, on April 1, 1913; married May 23, 1855 at Mission San Jose, California, Julius Kirke Rose, son of Rufus and Deborah (Hatch) Rose. He was born August 3, 1820, and died at Saginaw, Michigan, on August 23, 1902.

1. May Rose⁸ born May 1, 1856 - see Family 60, page 62.
2. Blanche Rose⁸ born November 19, 1857 - see Family 61, page 64.
3. Charlotte Ellsworth Rose⁸ born December 3, 1866 - see Family 62, page 65.

Family 60 - May Rose⁸ (daughter of Ellen Augusta Ellsworth Rose⁷, Edward Augustus Ellsworth⁶, Henry Leavitt Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 59, page 61) was born in San Francisco, California, on May 1, 1856 and died March 2, 1890 at Utica, New York. In 1861 she removed with her parents to Saginaw, Michigan. Much of her liberal education was obtained at Bridgeton, N.J. She was President of the Women's Foreign and Home Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian Church in Utica, New York. She spoke well, wrote forcibly and beautifully; and some of her papers were given considerable circulation. On September 14, 1876, she married Rev. Dr. Robert Lucky Bachman, son of Jonathan and Frances (Rhea) Bachman. He was born June 14, 1844 at Kingsport, Tennessee. When a boy he fought on the Confederate side along with his relatives and friends. He graduated Hamilton College, Clinton, N.Y. in 1871; D.D. Auburn Seminary, Auburn, N.Y. in 1874; Phi Beta Kappa; received the Clark prize for oratory at Hamilton College. In 1880 he went to Utica, N.Y. and for sixteen years was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. He was an able and powerful advocate of prohibition, the abolition of gambling, the creation of city parks and other civic betterments. He was always a member, and closely associated with the work of Chambers of Commerce and other civic societies created for the public good. When his health was impaired, he decided to leave Utica to again return to the state of his birth. He accepted the pastorate in the Second Presbyterian Church in Knoxville, Tennessee, where his work was equally effective. So much did his Utica church members think of him, that they kept the pastorate open for a year in the hope that he might return. He believed in practical Christianity and in its application to everyday life. He died September 21, 1921 at Rockwood, Tennessee. (Source: Newspaper obituary)

1. Robert Lucky Bachman, Jr.⁹ (Rev.) was born June 14, 1877 at Fayetteville, New York, and died at Great Barrington, Massachusetts on November 28, 1921. He went to Utica, N.Y. with his parents in 1880, and received his early education at the Cicely Baker School and the Hotchkiss Preparatory School. He was graduated from Princeton University in 1899. He entered Princeton Theological Seminary but did not complete the course. Leaving Princeton, he travelled abroad for two years, principally in Russia, and was an interested student of the country and became well versed in its civic and economic conditions. Upon his return from Europe he became associated with the Committee of Fifteen of the city of New York and was until a short time previous to his departure active in its work. He attended Union Theological Seminary and graduated from that institution. He was ordained in the Episcopal ministry in 1913 by Bishop Greer and became assistant rector of Grace Church in New York. While engaged in the work of that parish, he took an active interest in settlement work in New York City. He later was an assistant to Bishop Courtney at St. James' church on Madison Avenue in New York City. His first parish was at Portsmouth, R.I., where he acted as rector until he came to Great Barrington on January 1, 1920. While connected with the two large New York City parishes he did continuous work in settlements and among the poor. He was a gifted scholar, of fine mind, brilliant, both as a speaker and as a writer. His sermons were marked by an unusual poetical quality and imagination. His diction was faultless and the simplicity and clarity of his language was remarkable. He carried the same perfection of detail through all the services of the church, which during his rectorship became constantly more dignified and impressive. Never married. 2. Ellen Ellsworth Bachman⁹ was born March 7, 1882 at Utica, New York. For several years, she was a member of the Abigail Wolcott Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution of Windsor, Connecticut, but transferred to the Bucks County Chapter of Pennsylvania. Is also a member of The Pennsylvania Society of Colonial Dames. At Knoxville, Tennessee, on October 27, 1910, she married Frederick Hiester Clymer, son of William H. and Valeria (Smith) Clymer. (His great grandfather, Daniel C. Clymer, was a classmate of Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth at Princeton in 1766. There were only thirty-one members of that class. George Clymer, signer of The Declaration of Independence and The Constitution, was a first cousin of Col. Daniel C. Clymer.) He was born at Joanna Furnace, Berks County, Pa. on May 2, 1869. His first schooling was in private institutions in Reading. He later attended Lafayette College, from which he was graduated in 1891 with the degree of mining engineer. He then took a position with the Joseph E. Thorp Furnace Company, of Everett, Bedford County, and in 1893 was appointed superintendent of the Emaus Furnace Company, at Emaus, Lehigh County. Two years later he went to Rockwood, Tennessee, as mining engineer for the Roane Iron Company. He was associated with that company for over 21 years, resigning the position of general superintendent in 1916. Since that time he has been virtually retired from the iron industry. During the World War period his time was devoted to the sale of Liberty Loan bonds, Red Cross and other activities in Roane County, Tennessee. He was county chairman of the War Saving Stamp campaign and legal adviser of the Selective Service System in Roane county. On returning to Pennsylvania in 1924, he settled in Doylestown, Pa. Upon his retirement from active business in his profession he became president of the Tennessee Cast Iron Pipe Company, president of the Rockwood Machinery Company and vice president of the Rockwood National Bank. He was a member of the Engineers' Club of Philadelphia, a former member of the Kiwanis Club of Doylestown, and a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers since 1896. He attended St. James Episcopal Church, Doylestown. He was one of the community's most highly respected citizens and one of the original sponsors of the Bucks County Council, Boy Scouts of America. He was former treasurer of the Bucks County Scout Council and during the building of Camp Buccou - the official Boy Scout camp - all engineering and road work service at the camp site was but a small part of his contribution to Bucks county boyhood. He died suddenly of a heart attack on February 25, 1937, in Bethlehem, to which city he had driven with a daughter to meet his son. At a dinner meeting of Scout leaders to be held in the Doylestown Armory, February 26, 1937, he was to have been presented with an appropriate recognition for his Scout service - the beaver award. His death prevented the presentation of the emblem, which was later given to the family. (Source: local newspaper obituary) Res. 97 Shewell Avenue, Doylestown, Pa.

1. Alfred Holt Stanley⁹ born December 23, 1896; married Lora Melvin on August 14, 1918, Paris, France. He went to France in November 1916 as an ambulance driver in the American Field Service. After several months service with the French Army he transferred to the French Foreign Legion as a necessary step to join the Lafayette Flying Corps. In February 1918 he went to the Front in Escadrille Spad 23 as a combat pilot where he remained until March 1919 when he was demobilized with the rank of Adjutant. For this combat service Adjutant Stanley received the Medaille Militaire, and the Croix de Guerre six times. These citations were awarded between May 19, 1918 and October 30, 1918. He has continued with his flying and has had at least 4000 hours in the air.

Lora Melvin (Stanley) sailed for France in October 1917 as a member of the "American Fund for French Wounded". She served as "chauffeuse-interpretes" in a unit which also included a woman doctor (Dr. Clara Davis), an assistant doctor and a nurse. They were sent to the Verdun sector and stationed at Issoncourt. In May 1918 she was transferred to the "Foyer du Soldat" and was stationed in the Argonne at Verrieres near San Menehould where she remained until the Armistice. Five days after their marriage they returned to their respective posts at the Front. In January 1919, Mrs. Stanley was transferred to Rixheim in Alsace where Adjutant Stanley's Escadrille was stationed. She returned to the United States May 30, 1919. She received a medal from the French Minister of War for having served over six months at the Front. She resides with her brother at 654 Ash Street, Winnetka, Illinois.

Family 63 - Annie Goodrich Ellsworth⁶ (daughter of Henry Leavitt Ellsworth⁵, Chief Justice Oliver Ellsworth⁴ - see Family 48, page 50) was born January 5, 1826, died January 21, 1900; sent the first message "What Hath God Wrought" over Morse's original telegraph line from Washington to Baltimore on May 24, 1844. Professor Morse was then living at Mr. Ellsworth's house in Washington. She married in Lafayette, Indiana, on July 5, 1852 Roswell Chamberlain Smith (later changed to Roswell Smith) (1st cousin to Caroline Cleveland Smith, Family 39) lawyer and publisher, born at Lebanon, Connecticut, on March 30, 1829, the son of Asher Ladd Smith, and his second wife, Wealthy Pratt. In 1843 he went to New York to enter the employ of his uncle's publishers, Paine & Burgess. Five years later he entered Brown University as a student in the two-year English and scientific course. After honorable dismissal, May 6, 1850, he studied law in Hartford under Thomas C. Perkins and began practice in Lafayette, Indiana. In 1868, as a result of a successful practice and fortunate investments in real estate, Smith was able to retire and go to Europe. He had conceived the idea of buying a newspaper or a magazine upon his return, and when, by arrangement, he met Josiah Gilbert Holland at Geneva, the two worked out plans for a magazine to encourage American art and literature. A warm friendship developed between them and upon their return to the United States in 1870 he joined with Charles Scribner, the publisher of Holland's works, in the corporation of Scribner & Co. which in November 1870 published the first issue of Scribner's Monthly. In 1873 Smith proposed the publication of a high-class magazine for children, and accordingly St. Nicholas, edited by Mary Elizabeth Mapes Dodge was sponsored by the firm. In the first of the financial panic of that year, Smith held out for the purchase and merging with the new magazine of several juvenile periodicals, and the outcome completely vindicated his judgment. In 1881 Holland, in ill health, sold his interest in the company to Smith, and later Smith also purchased the Scribner interest, which gave him control of the magazine. This purchase, however, carried the requirement that he change the name of the company and of the periodical, and in this way Scribner's Monthly became the Century. In 1882 Smith first conceived the idea of The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia, which was his chief interest for the next ten years. That it was completed before his death was, to him, a great source of comfort. As work on it progressed, the project grew far beyond the proportions of the original design, which had been little more than a revision for American use of Ogilvie's "Imperial Dictionary", but Smith refused to consider proposals of economy and enabled the editors to make the Century the most comprehensive work of its kind in the English language up to the completion of the great Oxford Dictionary. Smith's behavior in this instance was characteristic: whatever he undertook he determined should be the best in its field, regardless of expense. As a result of this characteristic, his magazines, under Alexander Wilson Drake as art director were a major factor in stimulating the development of American illustration. Holding the enthusiastic belief that American publications could win praise and financial success in foreign countries, Smith demonstrated his faith by spending large sums of money, personally arranging the details involved in placing his magazines before English readers. In addition to his activities as President of the Century Co., he was interested in educational work, especially in the South; Lincoln Hall, at Berea College, Kentucky, is an example of his generosity. Smith's own literary work was slight. It consists of a sixteen line poem, "What the Devil Said to the Young Man" (Scribners Monthly, May 1871) and two short stories in St. Nicholas "The Boy Who Worked (Jan. 1874) and "Little Hold-fast" (Jan. 1891) of small value in themselves. The stories illustrate, as Smith intended, two principles that he followed rigidly: work hard; and when you make a promise, hold fast to it, regardless of consequences. Smith was tall, with a leonine head and made a commanding appearance. He loved his home, his family and a few friends, but he was not fond of "social life". He felt that a man should be useful in a public way and he was too busy trying to be useful to have time for trivial pleasures. He died April 19, 1892. They had six children.

1. Julia Goodrich (Roswell-Smith)⁷ was born April 23, 1853 and is living with her daughter, Elizabeth. On April 23, 1879, she married George Inness, Jr., artist, son of George and Mary (Hart) Inness. He was born in Paris, France, January 5, 1854. He spent his early childhood in Paris, Florence and Rome, while his father, one of the greatest American landscape painters of his time, was studying in those cities. His early art work was done in his father's studio and except for Leon Bonnat with whom he studied in Paris in 1875, the older Inness was his only teacher. At 18, he established his own studio in Boston, later moved to New York, and during that period was employed chiefly as a magazine illustrator. His early canvases are "The Ford" and "Patience" exhibited at the National Academy in 1877 and "At the Brook" and "The Price of the Dairy" shown the next year. To this period also belong his "Monarch of the Farm" and "Mother of the Herd" (1883). Following his marriage, Mr. Inness moved to Montclair, N.J., became a member of the Society of American Artists in 1880 and an associate of the National Academy of Design in 1893. Up to that time, although recognition and the praise of competent critics had come to Inness, he had been continually dissatisfied with his work, and unlike most artists, he had more than technical difficulties to master. It was necessary for him to develop beyond the influence of his father's genius if he were to succeed as an artist in his own right. At the beginning he had confined himself to figure and animal painting; thinking in that way to avoid the special province of the older Inness - the study of landscape - but in time he found the restriction chafing and he soon realized that his father had preceded him everywhere, and that he was becoming a mere copyist. The solution of these difficulties came in a strange manner in the year following the death of the elder Inness in 1894. The son had a vision of his father one day, even conversed with him; and out of that experience proceeded the act of will that was to liberate him. Returning home he destroyed most of his canvases, about one hundred in number, and forthwith sailed for Europe. In the new environment, he began to work with fresh enthusiasm, producing "The Crucifixion", "The Entombment", and other pictures of a religious mood, receiving honorable mention (in 1885) and the gold medal (in 1898) of the Paris Salon, and was elected an officer of the Academie des Beaux Arts in 1900. After five years in Paris, he returned home, having achieved stability. He had been advanced to a full member in the National Academy of Design in 1899. His pictures won for him a silver medal at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo in 1901, a silver medal at the Charleston Exposition in 1902 and a gold medal of the American Art Society the same year. He established studios at Cragmoor, N.Y., and at Tarpon Springs, Florida.

The best of his canvases are "Shepherd and Sheep" and "The First Snow at Cragmoor" both in the Metropolitan Museum in New York City, "Sheep Grazing" in the Montclair Art Museum, and mostly in private collections "Surf Horses", "The Coming Storm", "Morning on the River", "The Shower", "A Windy Day", "Passing of the Gale", "On the Bridge", "Homeward", "Our Farm", "The White Cow", "After the Shower", "By the Pond", "Springtime", "After the Snow Squall", "Rising Mists", "Leaving the Barn", "Over the Meadows" and "The Only Hope". This last picture with war as its theme attracted considerable attention when first exhibited in 1924. It shows the ruins of a great city, destroyed through its pursuit of wealth and selfish ends, the causes of war, but through the miasmic mist veiling it the eastern sun penetrates, and in the sun appears the Christ as the Light of the World and the "Only Hope". This was the seventh of eight large canvases produced for the Church of the Good Shepherd in Tarpon Springs, Florida. That in many respects represents his highest achievement as an interpreter of the religious spirit. The first three pictures of this group were entitled "Promise", "Realization" and "Fulfillment" and they depict as the titles suggest, the faith that nature or God keeps with those who trust and believe in the covenant between man and his universe; next is the triptych illustrating these sentiments from the Twenty-third Psalm; the eighth and final painting and the last work of all to come from his brush bears the title "The Lord Is in His Holy Temple" and in it one views a wooded scene with trees standing out majestically; and with a perspective that carries the vision even beyond to where there is a promise of still fairer fields.

In his religious painting, Inness broke away from the traditions of the medieval artists with their massive figures of apostles and saints and sought to reveal his message by a simple recourse to nature using as his instruments in the mystic interpretation form, color, and what is best of all, light. He saw that "beauty and glory on earth are not self-made, but sent thither by the hand and will of God", and to him the symbol for God was light. Hence, in his later pictures light becomes the dominant note dispelling shadow and mist, piercing black clouds and as in "The Only Hope" tingeing the edges of ruined walls with the light of a new promise. He brought to his art a sincere and convincing expression of his won, a technique built upon a foundation of sound principles, a direct and vigorous style and an individuality of coloring. He found his best inspiration in contemplative serenity and he approached nature in a devotional and tranquil spirit and caught a reciprocal mood from here. His landscapes, like Carots, hold the observer by distant prospects, they have no foreground and sweep past objects close to the eye, spreading far away to dim hills and woods and cloud-draped horizons. His artistic aptitudes extended beyond paints to architecture, music, acting, languages and literary expression. He was the author of "Life, Letters and Art of George Inness" (1917) and of a privately printed volume "Random Thoughts" composed of anecdotes, stories and essays delicate in humor and in their imaginative quality. He died at Cragmoor, New York, July 27, 1926. (Source: The National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, Vol. XXII, page 181) They had five children:

Rufus Clarke Stanley was the son of Hannibal Tone and Cornelia Caroline (Miner) Stanley. He attended Boston Technology Institute for one year, but was chiefly interested in boy's welfare. He settled in Elmira, New York, and was Y.M.C.A. Secretary; and immediately began to do independent work for boys, developing later into now well recognized boys and girls achievement training - particularly in agriculture and manual training, being a pioneer in New York State in the Four-H Clubs.
